Questions 22-23

I'm a memory expert. I want to show you how memory and anxiety are related – the more we think about bad memories and regrets, the more anxious we become. Also, some people do not see memories clearly in their minds. When people forget what really happened, they make up stories in their minds, which become new memories, and these stories can sometimes be negative and make people anxious. I encourage everyone to meditate and focus on your thoughts, whether you have a good memory or a bad memory. Let the thoughts come in and look at them for a moment; then let them disappear. Train yourself to see memories clearly and to accept whatever has happened to you. After doing this, you should try to look forward instead of backward. These things will help reduce anxiety.

22. What is NOT something the author recommends?
- (A) Accept things that have happened to us.
(B) Take medicine.
(C) Look ahead.
(D) Meditate and focus on thoughts.
23. What happens when people do not see their memories clearly?
- (A) They are mean to their friends.
(B) They can no longer be happy.
(C) They often make up new memories.
(D) They always feel very angry and sad.
